The SDCA ("The Small Drum Corps Association") or "Arena Drum Corps", was established in 2008 to create a forum for drum corps performance within a context that would both foster the activity at a grassroots level and provide for a maximum of impact. The idea, first conceived by Chris Ferrara, a former soprano soloist for The Chicago Royal Airs and Bugler Hall of Famer, quickly took on momentum and was embraced by drum and bugle corps organizations from all across The United States and Canada.

Combining live performance within a community school and on-going music education, Arena Drum Corps seeks to make the excitement and intimate experience of the drum corps activity immediately available in a manner that can be potentially sustainable for generations to come. Based upon the rich traditions of the past, SDCA's Arena Drum Corps has embraced the present in a way that it is hoped can insure the future of an activity that, over time, has enriched the lives of tens of thousands of its participants and their audiences.
